Summary

2021 has not been kind to the Canadian junior exploration sector and most juniors, including Harvest Gold, have seen their share prices suffer. Tax loss selling that started earlier than normal has just added to the misery but that will be coming to an end in the next few weeks.

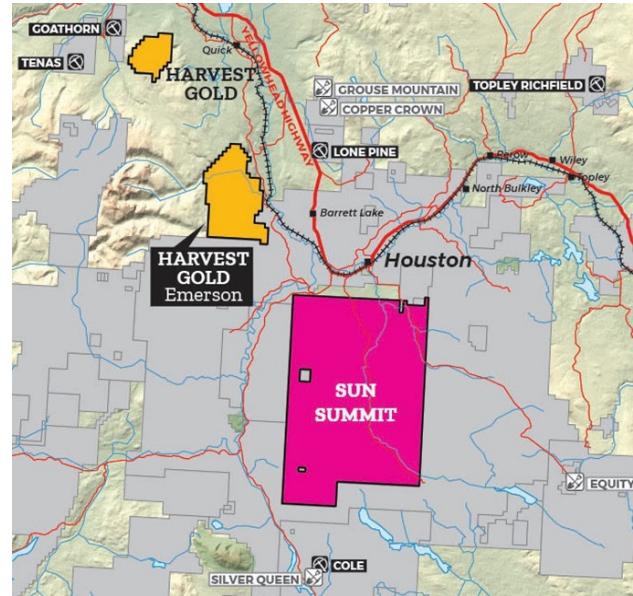

Over the past several years generalist money has avoided the junior sector as general equities have marched higher year after year. Some cracks seem to be forming though as technology shares have fallen precipitously over the past month and traders are comparing recent action to the rolling over over the tech sector in 2000. Gold gained $15 on Friday with equities and crypto selling off amid the first, early signs of a shift in investor sentiment.

Those who have been invested in the junior sector for many years understand that when washouts in the sector like we have seen this year occur the foundation is laid for a strong comeback - that comeback starts in January 2022 and Harvest Gold is perfectly positioned to benefit from new money flowing into the sector.

For those new to the story please review my initial report on Harvest's Emerson gold project at <http://statesidereport.com/wp-content/uploads/2021/06/Harvest-Gold-Near-The-Sun-Summit-Buck-Gold-Discovery-and-Backed-by-an-Experienced-Geo-Team.pdf>.

Harvest management spent most of 2021 doing everything necessary to get to the drilling stage and with the current $1.4 million financing the company will be in a position to begin drilling in late January 2022.

I would encourage readers to watch this 7 minute video where geologist Henry Awmack and Pat Donnelly discuss the exciting drill targets that have been identified via the 3D IP surveys.

The company has kept a rather low profile throughout 2021 but that is about to change. They are in the middle of a $1.4 million financing and along with it a renewed focus on marketing. The exciting drill targets that have been developed received quite a bit of interest from key players in the industry and anticipation is building for the start of drilling.

The share price looks to have bottomed and now is the perfect time to look at Harvest as tax loss selling comes to an end and the excitement begins to build in anticipation of drilling and with it additional marketing. With a $2 million market cap and only 22 million shares outstanding it won't take much buying to move the share price higher so for those looking to establish a position the sooner the better.
